The 2022 Conference on climate change is being held from 6 to 18 November in Chaim el-Sheik, Egypt.

It is dubbed the Implementation Summit. There is growing concern that the commitment to provide U$100 billion per year is lagging behind.

The question of keeping the temperature lid below 1.5°C is coming back to bite harshly. Developed and emerging nations are being urged to reduce the gas pedal in order to reduce significantly greenhouse gas emissions.

A new issue that was raised on the first day is the need to make for compensation for the damage caused by climate change.

At the opening, the UN Secretary-General set the tone underlining the gravity of the situation. His imagery was that humanity was driving blindfolded at breakneck speed into a precipice.
